

Franchesca Lane Warren Best-selling Author, Speaker, Teacher

A proven expert in urban education, instructional strategies and student engagement for 'at risk' students, Franchesca Lane-Warren is the creator of The Educator's Room, LLC, where she uses that platform to share tools and resources educators can use to empower them in the classroom. After working in several inner city high schools across the country, she recognized that the struggle in urban classrooms centered around stakeholders not understanding both the effects of poverty and student behavior. Ultimately she believes that in order to change around struggling schools, there has to be an emphasis on what students can do instead of what they can't do in the classroom. As seen on Huffington Post, Diane Ravitch's blog, BlogHer and educational conferences across the world, she's been able to leverage her voice to address instructional strategies, urban education and student engagement in urban settings.

SPEAKING TOPICS:

Urban Education: Making Our Schools Work for "At-Risk" Students

Being successful in working in urban classrooms takes teachers and administrators that understand not only poverty but how to engage students. Find out how you can use practical tips to make your school a success.

Instructional Strategies For Struggling Readers

Struggling readers usually sit in middle/high school classrooms and 'check out' long before the first book is assigned. Find out how to use research based strategies to help that struggling reader be successful in class.

Engaging Minority Students in the ELA Classroom

The days of assigning literature in ELA classes based on tradition is quietly coming to an end. Instead teachers are looking for ways to not only engage students but to bring a multicultural lense to the class. Find out ways to not only engage but motivate minority students in the classroom.
